QUARTERLY REVIEW & OUTLOOK SUMMARY

As we enter the final quarter of 2017, we await the decision of central banks in the US and the Eurozone as to whether or not they will begin withdrawing stimulus. There continues to be solid growth momentum driving the global economy higher, which we believe is likely to continue for the coming quarter, however, we are cognisant that there remains a number of 'known unknowns' in the world and therefore the withdrawal of stimulus will need to be managed carefully. UK equities remain remarkably resilient and continue to defy the negative sentiment surrounding Brexit and the lack of real wage growth. We believe the BoE is likely to raise interest rates by a quarter point in their next meeting (Carney is indicating as such) which could help to sustain the recovery in sterling and take the edge off import inflation. We believe, as we have done for some time, that there is still downside risk to the UK government debt market, and therefore remain cautious on credit in general and will be retaining our underweight to government debt.

US equity markets continue to trade at record highs, President Trump's reform agenda remains an ambitious one and the opacity of his proposals is causing distractions. Clarity in Europe and EM, where valuations remain attractive and fundamentals are supportive, presently drives our thinking. However, after nearly 9 months of a weak US dollar, there will potentially be opportunities to take advantage of a rebound, therefore we will be watching with interest. For the remainder of the year, we retain our view that the bull market we are in is not yet over, but will be treading carefully into the final quarter of 2017, as we endeavour to keep a firm grip on any returns made so far this year.
